

MANILOW LOOKING SKIN-CREDIBLY BAD!

AGING singer Barry Manilow's latest quest to beat the clock has turned into a train wreck.

The 70-year-old star's new face is tight as a drum and he's looking more like a mannequin than a real live man, say sources.

Experts like plastic surgeon Dr. Anthony Youn say the singer has gone too far and appears "unnatural."

"Overdone plastic surgery occurs when a person looks fake," says the Troy, Mich., doctor.

"It should do nothing more than make a person look young for their age.

"Barry should not have tight, shiny, smooth skin. It is unnatural looking and his wide-eyed look is somewhat effeminate."

Under the knife

Doctors believe he's recently gone under the knife for yet ANOTHER face-lift.

"His skin appears even tighter than it has in the last few years," Beverly Hills plastic surgeon Dr. William Bruno tells GLOBE.

"This is clearly not his first face-lift."

According to sources, the Mandy singer had a face-lift in 1995, another with upper and lower eye-lifts in 2003, a full eye-lift in 2004, plus an additional face-lift in 2006 – as well as regular Botox injections.

"It is also evident that he has had significant filler in his cheeks in addition to Botox in various areas of his face such as the chin, crow's feet and forehead," notes Bruno.

"There are tell-tale scars near his ears. It is clear this is a man who has gone to great lengths to stave off the aging process."

Medical experts say it's obvious Barry has had cosmetic work, but now he looks 'unnatural'

Sinai School of Medicine, believes Manilow's had a slew of cosmetic procedures.

"There is no doubt he has had a face-lift costing between $7,500 and $15,000 – likely several over his lifetime," he says.

"The scars are visible around his ears and he is probably growing the unsightly side-burns to help camouflage the scars. He also has some pleating of the skin behind his neck – this is a surgical giveaway.

"His upper eyelids have been lifted at a cost up to $5,000, and his lower eyelids may have been $6,000.

"His cheeks also look extremely full. He's likely had fat grafting – about $3,000 – or even a cheek implant placed on the bone for as much as $6,000."

And Youn warns "that if he continues to have more and more work done, he will only succeed in looking even odder and more unnatural."
